Mighly accomplished and beautiful young lady, and deeply amented by a large circle of friends. In 1823, death spain visited his family circle. His eldest son died, in his twenty-eighth year. He had graduated at Brown University and studied law with his father, of whom he was the pride, and the ornament of his family. In the heids period of fourteen months, Mr. Burges was called to mourn over the graves of four children, taken from him is the morning of life, full of promise and joy.

"From what has been written concerning Mr. Burges, (asys the memoir referred to,) we may confidently claim for him the true elements of greatness. Let memory go back to his young days, and contemplate the victissitudes, of that period, his employments, habits, and limited means for the acquisition of knowledge, let his collegiate honors and professional career be remembered; and then view him as he stood before the country while in Congress, and none will dispute his title to encience. That country in her brighest as in her darkest period, looks to such officens for counsel, and their animating voices are heard pleading for her rights, and exhorting to patriotism."
